For The Emancipation of Muslim Women

- The new book from the pioneer of liberal Islam
- Theme for Debate: Why is the headscarf an expression of oppression and parallel society

No religion fears the emancipation of women to the degree that Islam does. The headscarf serves to maintain the traditional power structure. It symbolizes the power the men have over the women, and leads to self-control of women. But is the headscarf really a requirement of the religion or merely a by-product of the patriarchy?

In 2017 Claudius published the heavily discussed debate book, "Reform of Islam". Now the author speaks in clear, easy to grasp terms, mainly to girls, mothers and educators, but also all people who are looking for good arguments in seeking a clear position on the subject of headscarves.

Abdel-Hakim Ourghi was born in Algeria in 1968. Since 2011, he has headed the Department of Islamic Theology and Religious Pedagogy at the Freiburg School of Pedagogy.

The Joy of Watching Others Suffer

- Exploring the causes of increasing aggression in today's society
- Intensive analysis: Where in the world did this desire for violence come from?

Why do people film badly injured people instead of helping them? Why do millions of people spend hours playing make-believe war games on their computers? There seems to be an age-old need, a deep desire to watch people suffer and die- in the audience of the ancient colosseums of Rome, in front of the Guillotines of France, in Internet. Modern society, as enlightened and thoughtful as it may seem, has not overcome crudeness. It only administers or represses it. Ninety years after Sigmund Freud's famous treatise on "Civilization and Its Discontents", Peter Fischer and Eva Lerner analyse the connection between boredom, lack of empathy and destructiveness from a socio-psychological point of view.

Peter Fischer occupies the Chair for Social Psychology at the University of Regensburg

Eva Lerner is a psychologist and sociologist. She researches and teaches at the FOM University in Munich and at the University of Regensburg. Her research focuses on risk behavior, decision making and positive psychology.

Fatalism is the new way of living

- A mature attitude of resignation instead of self-optimization
- Inspiration to more coolness and serenity

Fatalism has always had a bad reputation. Philosophers, theologians and politicians fought against it in the name of freedom of the will. Yet- it is time to rediscover fatalism – as a virtue, an attitude and as a possible way of mastering life. Modern man devotes himself totally to sovereignty and wants to force his will upon life, but fails regularly.

Every plan has its limits when one is suddenly confronted with the unexpected. Bert Brecht testified to this.

Fatalism in contrast means serenity. There are so many things in the course of the world that we can't change – and we don't have to be able to change them. It makes much more sense, not to overestimate your own power and to pay tribute to the inevitable.

Matthias Drobinski, born in 1964, studied history, catholic theology and German literature and language. He's been writing for the Süddeutsche Zeitung since 1997 and is the paper's editor for Religion and Church matters in Germany.

Rediscovering an ancient meditation path with children

- Accompany children on their way to god
- Tested in practice with children
- Practical step by step manual for all age groups

Children are naturals in meditation: Observing, marveling, just being present and perceiving-many qualities, which have to be relearned slowly by adults on their search for inner peace. The experienced teacher of meditation Maike Schmauß has written a guideline for those who accompany and teach children the art of heart prayer. Step by step the author explains breathing exercises, contemplation games and imaginary journeys, which lead children to inner peace and to an encounter with nature and god. The book contains helpful tips on how to integrate a practice of meditation into the child's everyday life and gives detailed descriptions of various challenging meditation exercises.

Maike Schmauß, born 1939, has been giving lectures and holding church services for many years. She teaches seminars at Spirituelles Zentrum St. Martin in Munich and at Kloster Bernried. She uses various methods in her work such as bibliology, meditation and body work, to give people impulses for their spirituality.

What does it mean to be Christian in a digital world

Yuval Noah Harari, in his best-selling book, Homo Deus, predicted that immersion in the digital world will make human beings god-like, able to conquer death in the long run. Volker Jung, Bishop, in charge of Media presence in Germany, heartily disagrees. Especially now in a world in which the advancements in Genetics and Nanotechnology offer seemingly infinite possibilities, we must work to understand the finite properties of humans, and learn what separates us from machines and artificial intelligence. The prominent theologian campaigns for the emancipation of the human race from the unforeseen side-effects of an over-exaggerated turboevolution.

- Current issue digitization: Clear perspectives for a technology which remains under control by humans
- The long awaited Christian answer to Yuval Noah Harari's bestseller *Homo Deus

Volker Jung, born in 1960, got his post-doctorate in Theology and is president of the protestant church in Hessen and Nassau. His home office is in Darmstadt. He is chairman of the board of the Protestant Association for Media Communication, and Media Bishop of the Lutheran Church

Point Of Dispute: Ecumenism

- For those readers who are critical of the ecumenism line of the Lutheran Church
- Debate Text for Catholics and Protestants

In times in which the major denominations speak more and more often with one voice, but ecumenical statements are hardly able to promote the public discourse, the Munich pastor Gerson Raabe asks the provocative question: Has Christianity become so defensive that we no longer want to know anything about differences? That the border can no longer be drawn between denominations, but between Christians and atheists. And he is convinced: Before Protestantism sinks into meaninglessness, it must remember its denominational background knowledge. And genuine ecumenism can only be an ecumenism of profiles.

Gerson Raabe, born 1960, studied theology and philosophy. He is the Minister at Erlöserkirche in Munich-Schwabing

The alphabet of friendship

Aristotle said no man can live without friendship. In today's world, where families live so far apart, and relationships are more and more difficult to maintain, friendship is increasingly crucial. But what exactly is a friendship? How many different types of friendship are there? How do you keep a friendship alive? The author answers all these questions, in a down-to-earth manner, based on his psychological insights. Luckily, friendship is something we can actually practice. Friends are a family we can choose ourselves.

- Those who cultivate friendships live longer and healthier lives
- Why friendship becomes more and more important in today's society

The axis of stupidity

Political kitsch is booming , in all political camps: Rhetoric of concern, protest vigils, expressions of solidarity . All in the name of diversity, humanity or decency. Sentimental catchphrases, glorified intensity of feelings, nostalgia for the „good old days“ and childishly staged events for the media are ruling public debate nowadays. Social debates are characterized by aggressive emotionalism and embarrassing political rituals. Empty phrases seem to be the preferred mode of discussion in Germany. The philosopher and publicist, Alexander Grau, discovers the reasons for the rampant growth of political kitsch and analyses the role it plays in today's social arguments.

- Analysis of the German state of mind
- Plea for rational thinking in political debates

Alexander Grau has a doctorate in philosophy and works as a freelance journalist for culture and science. For the political magazine Cicero he writes the highly acclaimed online column „Grauzone.“

To think is to transcend

- „Theological world-literature“ (DER SPIEGEL)
- Clear, encouraging thoughts in times of change

Jürgen Moltmann played a vital role in the mood of uprising in the 60's. Now he is raising his voice in a time when the need for security seems to take precedence over reform. But another world is possible. When hope rules our thoughts, to think is to transcend. Reality's solid shores are surrounded by dreams and possibilities. The personal conclusion of a theologian of great importance in these times: If you believe in God, you'll expect his gifts.

Jürgen Moltmann, born in 1926, studied Theology while a prisoner of war in England. After returning to Germany, he continued his studies in Göttingen. From 1967 to 1994 he was Professor of Systematic Theology at the University of Tübingen. Since then he has accepted numerous international guest professorships and been on lecture tours all over the world. With his Theology of Hope (1964) he has had more influence on today's Theology than almost anybody else, since 1945.
